(LATE FIRST LORD COMMISSIONER OF THE ADMIRALTY),

&c. &c. &c.

MY LORD,

IN the memorable and popular administration of your Lordship, which was crowned with the most brilliant success, I had the honour of submitting to you the idea on which I proposed to form these signals, and your handsome appreciation of their probable utility, has induced me to persevere in the completion of them.

As

INTRODUCTION.

THIS Vocabulary was originally made to facilitate the conveyance of messages from the Romney off Copenhagen, to Admiral Dickson off Elsineur; its utility was in that instance so obvious, and so generally allowed by the Captains of the North Sea squadron, that Sir Home Popham conceived it might be brought into more extensive practice, and has already given copies to different officers, with the request, that they will point out any improvement, and send it to Lord Spencer, who has the original for consideration how far it may be expedient to print it, and bring it forward for general use.

It is by no means intended to interfere with the established signals, as a single signal is certainly the most efficient for military evolutions.

It frequently however happens that officers wish to make communications of very essential moment far beyond the capacity of the established signals, and it is presumed that this Vocabulary will afford such convenience.

Words

Words of more general use than those already established can at all times be inserted, especially those of local signification on different services; and words may always be changed, or others added, without any intercourse except by the Vocabulary.

Orders may be communicated for ships to go on detached services, when it would be impossible to hoist a boat out, or have any communication with the Commander in Chief: and secret keys numbered to be opened according to signals, may be established to communicate secret orders. By the addition of a pendant, this Vocabulary may be carried to a great extent, and by having the words of an Entick or other small dictionary numbered, it will be as comprehensive as a dictionary; though I think it is at present sufficiently so for all general purposes at sea.

This Vocabulary may be also used as a cipher, either in the common or secret keys, but the secret keys and their changes must be fixed on by the Commander in Chief.

Plymouth, April 18, 1803.

I experienced so many advantages from the use of these signals, that on my return to England from the Red Sea, I prepared a second edition, and the favourable opinion which several officers of the squadron at Plymouth expressed of the utility of the first edition induced me to reprint it, with two more parts, of words and sentences.

Instances

Digitized by Google

Instances of the impossibility of making communications by trumpet in heavy gales of wind, when it is of the last importance to convey intelligence, have happened so frequently, that it is unnecessary to recapitulate them.

The general port signals may also be expeditiously communicated from the Commander in Chief's ship, by which the wear and tear of boats will be materially saved, and the necessity of their bearing up for Portsmouth harbour in bad weather obviated. When this is the case the boats frequently get very much damaged and the crews desert, or get ill by lying in their boats with their wet clothes on; as officers do not always carry them on board the ships in harbour, and it is even well to avoid that communication.

The second and third parts make the Vocabulary very comprehensive, and their application is as simple as the first part.

The second part consists of words next useful to those in the first, and is placed opposite to it in alphabetical order, to save the trouble of opening the book twice.

The third part is placed by itself, as it consists of sentences most applicable to military or general conversation. These sentences should be frequently practised to make them familiar, as they will save many signals.

INSTRUCTIONS for the Flags used with this Vocabulary only.

N. B. The signals are to be kept abroad until they are repeated by the ships in succession, and until they reach the Commander in Chief, when he is not in a position to see them as soon as made.

PREPARATIVE. Preparatory to any message, a diagonal red and white flag is to be hoisted.

MESSAGE FINISHED. Is denoted by a diagonal blue and yellow flag, which may be hoisted or not according to circumstances, or the telegraph flag hauled down.

MESSAGE UNDERSTOOD. The affirmative flag hoisted at the last station and repeated.

MESSAGE NOT UNDERSTOOD. The affirmative flag, with a white pendant under it.

N. B. It is recommended in cases of doubt, that the ship repeat the signal instead of hoisting the answering pendant: or, when any particular number in a message is not understood, it is to be expressed by hoisting the numerical pendant, with the number of the word or sentence beginning from the first word; for instance, if it was the fourth word, when the message is finished, the numeral pendant (4) will be hoisted by the ship not understanding; and so on by any other. The ship making signal is then to repeat that word, and if then not comprehended, to change it for one nearest synonimous.

MESSAGE TO BE ANSWERED. The answer will be looked upon as the affirmative of the message being understood.

GENERAL

Digitized by Google

General Observations.

The flags are intended to represent the figures placed opposite to them in the annexed table. A flag hoisted alone, or under another flag, is to represent units. When two flags are hoisted, the upper flag is to represent tens. When three are hoisted, the uppermost is to represent hundreds, the next tens, and the lowest units. The thousands are denoted by pendants or balls, as may appear most likely to be seen, inferior and superior: superior, 1000; inferior, 2000. As for example:

No. 1026. Aback. No. 2026. Shall I leave off action?

When the substitute flag is hoisted under other flags, it is to represent the same figure as the flag immediately above it. For example:—to represent the number 33, the substitute flag will be hoisted under the flag representing 3. When the cipher flag is hoisted under other flags, it represents the cipher, as the cipher flag under number 3 represents 30.

Prepositions and articles will be used as seldom as possible, and the sentences will be made short. In verbs, the number, person, tense, and mood, must be applied to the sense of the sentence; and attention in the same respect must be paid to words having more than one termination, and to numbers in general. But when it happens that the exact word is not in the vocabulary, one nearest nearest synonymous will be adopted. Should it however be of any consequence to use a word not in the vocabulary, it can be spelt by the numerical alphabet, which may be known by the numbers from 1 to 25, and will be spelt as short as possible. Should it be necessary to express numbers in a message, the numerical pendant must be hoisted with the signal; and when a ship's name is to be made, it ought to be with the union jack, and her number as in the list of the navy.

Simple words may be used to form a compound, which will save time in spelling; and when any simple word forms a syllable, it may be also used, and the other part of the word spelt by the letters.

Compass signals may be used in messages, if necessary, as their flags are not in the numerical code.

In blowing weather, or when much sail is set, as it may be inconvenient to hoist three flags and a pendant at the same place, the two upper flags may be hoisted at one part of the ship, and the two others at another, taking the places in the following progression according as they happen to be complete: 1st main, 2d fore, 3d mizen, 4th gaft, 5th ensign-staff.
